Description: Stonehurst Wood is a privately owned woodland, near Cartmel. It is mixed woodland with, primarily native hardwoods, some of which are around an old quarry site. The owners have kindly offered permission for a Woodfuel extraction demonstration; this will be to extract lengths of timber to a suitable location to be processed later. This is an open event which will benefit the community via showing an example of low impact extraction. The benefits of extracting the timber are widespread, it can then be used for Woodfuel and the effects of ongoing management in the woodland will improve the structure and diversity.

Demonstration Details: The demonstration will include the extraction of pole lengths from the woodland to a suitable location, for future processing. This will be done using an alpine tractor. Brush and tops can then be stacked as eco-piles or for burning.

Bring sturdy footwear, wet weather wear and a packed lunch!
